Shop floor management

We talk a lot here at Ingenics about people vs. systems as the key to driving successful business growth. And what better way to understand the people in your facility than by getting right into the middle of things on the shop floor? That's what Shop Floor Management is all about. The concept is simple: get management out of the office, and into the center of activity. Being in the middle, rather than on the sidelines, of the action has proven to be both more effective and more sustainable. From the shop floor, you can better visualize workflow and work space to create minimal barriers to both material and information. You can get a better understanding of how things are working in reality, and what might need to change. Perhaps most importantly, you can then empower the people on the shop floor to do the same and benefit from their input before you seek to solve any problems or make any changes. This increases motivation, and builds strong leaders at every level of your organization. In short: Shop Floor Management can maximize production efficiency, quality, and productivity and ultimately, achieve long lasting results.
